

HOLMES'S PATENT VEGETABLE BOILER AND STRAINER is manufactured by Messrs. Jones Brothers and Co., Ablow Street, Wolverhampton, and has been designed for the purpose of taking the place of the ordinary cullender, or colander. The manufacturers state that, as every practical cook knows to her cost, vegetables that are boiled in saucepans and then poured out into a cullender, or lifted out with a fork, are often very badly broken, and reach the table looking as though they had been mashed. Holmes's patent obviates all this. It is divided into two pieces, which are secured at the top by brass hinges; at the bottom it is locked by a very simple bolt, which enables it to divide when required. When needed for use, the strainer with the vegetables is placed inside the saucepan. After the vegetables are sufficiently boiled, the saucepan is taken from the fire and the strainer is then lifted out, allowing the water to drain away, as shown in Fig. 2, then the vegetables are placed into the dish, as shown in Fig. 3, by simply loosening the pin in the bottom, which enables the strainer to divide in two. We have tested the ingenious apparatus, and it successfully answers every expectation. It is made in several sizes, the prices ranging from 1s. 11d. to 2s. 8d. each.

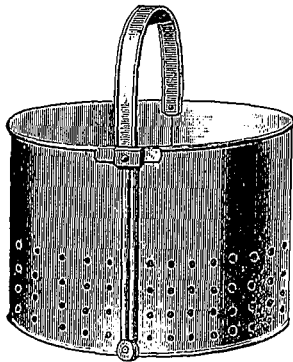

FIG. 1.
Patent Vegetable Boiler and Strainer.

FIG. 2.
Patent Vegetable Boiler being taken Out of Saucepan.

FIG. 3.
Showing Vegetables being Transferred Whole into the Dish.

BOLTONIAN ELASTIC-RIBBED UNDER-WEAR.—During the summer, when even the sight of woollen under-wear is oppressive, one looks around for a substitute before discarding one's spring attire. And we were pleased to find that the Rothwell Hosiery Company, Limited, of Bolton, Lancashire, have made this a speciality, they having manipulated all kinds of wool, silk, and spun-silk into pretty garments for ladies', children, and even gentlemen's wear. And for those for whom it is necessary always to wear wool, the "Natural Undyed Wool" clothing is so beautifully light and soft that irritation of the skin is an impossibility. We desire very heartily to recommend this firm, not only because we feel

previous page

next page