

a profession in which the sympathy and tenderness of women was worthily employed. The profession of nursing must always be auxiliary to medicine, and if the association was carried out in the way proposed it would be productive of great benefits.

Miss MOLLETT said the object of association was to obtain the legal status of a profession, and a charter to enable them to register properly trained nurses. She urged all nurses to become members of the association.

The resolution was then put to the meeting, and carried unanimously.

Sir HENRY ACKLAND, in proposing a vote of thanks to Princess CHRISTIAN, pointed out H.R.H.'s peculiar fitness to fill the place of president of the British Nurses' Association. Not only was she the able translator of a book on first aid to the sick and wounded, but the visitation of the sick formed a part of her daily life.

Dr. QUAIN, in seconding the vote of thanks, rejoiced that the Sairey Gamps of a former day had given place to the well-trained and educated ladies who did the nursing of to-day.

The proceedings terminated with a vote of thanks to the Chairman, proposed by Sir JOSEPH FAYRER, and seconded by Dr. DOUGLAS POWELL.

We have thought it advisable, in order to keep our readers au courant with the working of the British Nurses' Association, to chronicle its actions from its commencement. We shall in future issues enter upon an independent detailed criticism of its objects and bye-laws, adding such suggestions which we may consider to be to the advantage of the association from its members' point of view. Meanwhile we heartily commend the general scheme to all members of the medical and nursing professions, and hope that they will continue to give it that same energetic support which it so far has received. Nurses have it now within their reach to do a great deal, with a powerful association of this kind, to help themselves to place their profession upon at least a properly recognised basis.

LEGAL STATUS OF NURSES.

Gerne gewähren, Ungern bitten, Niederes versprechen, Hohes leisten, Sind stolzer Seelen, Beste Sitten, Die nur ein Edler, Sich mag erdreisten.

PERHAPS it is hardly possible to conceive a greater change than that which has taken place in the social position of hospital nurses during the last twenty years. Great as was the impetus given to the proper development of the nursing art during the Crimea, it was not very long ago—in fact, it seems only the other day—since the idea of gentlewomen taking up hospital work was looked upon otherwise than as a tremendous sacrifice, as being an act almost above praise, a great renun-
