*Please note that:

- The Working Time Directive only sets minimum standards and Member States are always allowed to provide higher levels of protection for workers in their national laws and regulations.

- Filling in the questionnaire, please keep in mind that the Working Time Directive only applies to workers and not to self-employed persons. Also keep in mind that it does not set levels of pay for working time, which is a purely national responsibility.

- The background document provides useful information regarding the concepts used in the following questionnaire. Please refer to it as necessary.

- There are a number of questions offering the possibility of making additional contributions under each point, and also a longer opportunity to express your opinion at the end.

Please confirm you have read through these important elements.

1. Objectives and approach to the review of the Working Time Directive

In your opinion, what is the impact of the current Working Time Directive giving workers the right to a limit to average weekly working time (currently set at 48 hours) and to minimum daily and weekly rest periods?

Please elaborate on your opinion with regard to the impact on health and safety of workers and people they work with.

[Optional]

On paper the directive provides safeguards for the health and safety of workers and the people they work with by preventing fatigue related ill health and injuries. This is particularly important in health care where fatigue can impact on patient outcomes.

If you see another impact, please specify:

[Optional]

The impact is limited due to lack of implementation and enforcement by local labour inspectorate.

2. Thematic questions

2. A. Scope

Concurrent contracts

*A single worker may be employed under several concurrent contracts. Should the limits provided in the Working Time Directive apply to all contracts taken together or to each contract separately?

If the Directive applies per worker, this means for example that all the hours worked under the different contracts should be added together and cannot exceed 48 hours on average (unless the worker signed an opt-out).

If the Directive applies per contract, this means for example that the worker can work 48 hours on average under each separate contract without an upper limit.

[only one answer possible]

- It is up to Member States to decide whether working time rules shall apply per worker or per contract
- The Directive should stipulate that working time rules shall apply per worker in situations where a worker has more than 1 contract with the same employer
- The Directive should stipulate that working time rules shall apply per worker in situations where a worker has more than 1 contract in any event
- The Directive should make it clear that it only applies per contract

2. B. Concept of working time

On-call time

On-call time corresponds to any period where the worker is required to remain at the workplace (or another place designated by the employer) and has to be ready to provide services. An example could be a doctor staying overnight at the hospital, where he can rest if there is no need to attend to patients.

Under the current Working Time Directive, as interpreted by the Court of Justice, on-call time is fully regarded as working time for the purpose of the Directive, regardless of whether active services are provided during that time. The period of on-call time within which the worker actively provides services is usually referred to as 'active on-call time', while the period within which services are not provided can be referred to as 'inactive on-call time'.

(See in particular Cases C-303/98 Simap, C-151/02 Jaeger, C-14/04 Dellas)
Please give your opinion on the following options as regards possible changes in the treatment of on-call time under the Working Time Directive:

If you would like to add comments or indicate another option, please specify:

* 500 character(s) maximum

We would like to see the European Court rulings effectively implemented across all sectors but in particular health where uncontrolled on call work and lack of compensatory rest can put both workers health and patients at risk.

Stand-by time
Stand-by time corresponds to any period where the worker is not required to remain at the workplace, but has to be contactable and ready to provide services. An example could be when a technician of a nuclear facility is at home, but has to be ready to come to the plant to provide services in an emergency.

Under the current Working Time Directive, as interpreted by the Court of Justice, stand-by time does not have to be considered as working time for the purpose of the Directive. Only active stand-by time, i.e. time in which the worker responds to a call, has to be fully counted as working time.
(See in particular Cases C-303/98 Simap, C-151/02 Jaeger, C-14/04 Dellas)
Please give your opinion on the following options as regards possible changes in the treatment of stand-by time under the Working Time Directive:

Standby can be dealt with by collective agreements.
2.C Derogations

Compensatory rest

Under the current Working Time Directive, as interpreted by the Court of Justice, a worker who by derogation from the general rules has not received his/her minimum daily rest of 11 consecutive hours in a 24-hour period, will have to receive an equivalent period of compensatory rest (i.e. 11 hours) directly after finishing the extended working time period. This sets a maximum of 24 hours to a single consecutive shift. (See in particular Case C-151/02 Jaeger)

How would you assess the possible introduction in the Working Time Directive of provisions regarding the period within which such a compensatory rest has to be taken:

[Optional]

Please see our response to 2B above. The European judgments have already set out the rationale behind the need for equivalence and immediacy of compensatory rest. This is becoming increasingly important with an ageing workforce, who are more likely to need restorative periods between shifts to prevent fatigue and work related ill health.

Reference period

The limit to weekly working time of 48 hours provided by the Working Time Directive is a limit to average working time. This means that in certain weeks the worker can be required to work more than 48 hours as long as this is balanced out by lower hours in other weeks. This average has to be calculated over a certain period, i.e. 'a reference period'. Currently, the standard limit to the reference period is 4 months, which can in certain sectors be extended by law up to 6 months, and by collective agreement it can be set up to 12 months.

What would be in your view the most appropriate approach to the limit set to the reference period to calculate average weekly working time:

[only one answer possible]

- No change in the current provisions
- Allow that reference periods can be set up to 6 months by law in any sector, and maintain that they can only be set up to 12 months by collective agreements
- Maintain that reference periods can be set up to 4 months by law in any sector, but allow that reference periods can be set up to 12 months by law in certain specific sectors (e.g. to take into account the size of the undertaking or to take into account fluctuations of demand)
- Allow both previous options (i.e. option 2 and option 3), meaning that reference periods can be set up to 6 months by law for any sector and up to 12 months by law in certain specific sectors
- Allow that reference periods can be set up to 12 months by law in any sector
- Other
- Do not know

Opt-out

Under the current Working Time Directive, Member States have the possibility not to apply the limit to average weekly working time of 48 hours, when the worker agrees to it individually and freely with the employer, and does not suffer prejudice for revoking such agreement (the 'opt-out').
What is your view on this opt-out clause:

- It should be maintained unchanged
- It should be maintained, but stricter conditions for the protection of the worker should be added in the Directive
- It should be maintained, but it should be provided in the Directive that the opt-out cannot be combined with other derogations under the current Directive
- It should be abolished, but in compensation there should be additional derogations made available for employers (e.g. allowing not to count on-call time fully as working time)
- It should be abolished
- Other
- Do not know

Autonomous workers

"Autonomous workers", such as for example managing executives, can fully determine their own working time (i.e. decide when and how many hours they work). Member States have the option to apply the main provisions of the Working Time Directive to these workers.

Please choose the most appropriate statement according to your views:

- The current Working Time Directive provides an adequate exemption as regards autonomous workers, and should not be changed
- The current exemption should be maintained in substance, but more clearly formulated, in order to enhance legal clarity and to prevent abuse
- The definition of autonomous workers is too narrow and should be expanded to other categories of workers who should be exempted too
- The definition of autonomous workers is too wide and should be limited
- Other
- Do not know

2.D Specific sectors/activities

Emergency services
The current Working Time Directive as interpreted by the Court of Justice applies to workers in emergency services, e.g. civil protection services like fire-fighting services, in the normal operation of these services. The current Directive contains several derogations that can be applied to the working time and rest periods of these workers in order to ensure the effective provision of these services. In the event of a catastrophe/disaster, the Working Time Directive does not apply at all.

(See in particular Cases C 397/01 to C 403/01 Pfeiffer and Case C-52/04 Feuerwehr Hamburg)

Please state your view on the application of the Directive to emergency services:

[only one answer possible]

- The current rules adequately balance the need to protect the health and safety of the workers and the people they work with/for with the need to guarantee effective provision of emergency services, and should remain unchanged
- The current rules should be maintained in substance, but clarified in light of the case law of the Court of Justice, to improve legal certainty
- There should be additional derogations applicable to all or some categories of these workers, addressing their specific situation
- The Working Time Directive should not be applied to workers in emergency services
- Other
- Do not know

Health care sector

The current Working Time Directive provides a derogation for health care services when they require continuity of service, meaning particularly that the rest periods of health care staff can be postponed to some extent.

Should there be a different provision on the working time organisation of health care staff with a view to safeguarding patient safety?

Please state your view:

[Only one answer possible]

- The current rules provide enough safety for patients
  - The current rules should be maintained in substance, but clarified in light of the case law of the Court of Justice on on-call time and on timing of compensatory rest to improve legal certainty
- There should be additional derogations applicable to workers in the health care sector in order to improve continuity of service
- There should be a more narrow derogation applicable to workers in the health care sector in order to improve patient safety
- Other
- Do not know

2.E Patterns of work
Changes in working patterns

The Working Time Directive was conceived more than 20 years ago, when information and communication technologies were not as developed and many types of present jobs did not exist yet. In light of these changes in working patterns and organisation, should the Working Time Directive introduce specific rules regulating particular situations and types of contracts such as telework, zero-hour contracts, flexitime, performance-based contracts without working time conditions, etc.?

Please state your view:

- The current rules are satisfactory and do not need to be changed
- The rules should be changed in light of increasing telework
- The rules should be changed in light of zero-hour contracts
- The rules should be changed in light of increased use of flexitime
- The rules should be changed in light of increased use of performance-based contracts without working time conditions
- Other
- Do not know

We have concerns that new ways of working make it more difficult to reconcile work and private life in some jobs. Whilst they offer flexibility, in some instances the flexibility is wholly to the benefit of the employer and not balanced out with the needs of the employee. This area requires further discussion.

Reconciliation of work and private life
Do you think the Working Time Directive should support better reconciliation of work and private life by introducing any of the following specific rights:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Very undesirable</th>
<th>Undesirable</th>
<th>No preference</th>
<th>Desirable</th>
<th>Very desirable</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>The right for a worker to ask for specific working time arrangements (e.g. flexitime, telework) depending on their personal situation, and to have their request duly considered</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The right for a worker to request to take daily rest in blocks of time instead of uninterruptedly, allowing the worker for example to go home early in the afternoon and later continue work from home at night, and to have their request duly considered</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

If you would like to add comments or indicate another option:

500 character(s) maximum

We are concerned that this move could open the door to more split shifts in the health sector. In the UK, the regulator does not encourage split shifts as they do not allow enough recovery time between shifts and can result in fatigue, ill health and disruption of family and social life (HSE 2006 Managing Shift Work)

Approach for the future of the Working Time Directive
Which of the following approaches for the future of the Working Time Directive do you prefer?

[only one answer possible]

- No new initiative (maintaining the current rules)
  - No legislative changes but initiatives towards improved legal clarity so that the rights and obligations following from the Directive are clearer and more readable and accessible to all (interpretative communication; ‘codification’ of the case law (i.e. clearly stating the case law of the Court of Justice in the legal text)

- Legislative changes but focused on the sectors where there is a specific need in terms of continuity of service (e.g. public services; sectors that work on a '24/7' basis like hospital services and emergency services)

- Legislative changes which would lead to an overall revision of the Directive, containing a mix of simplification and additional derogations while avoiding regression of the protection of workers

The RCN would like to see the existing directive and European rulings on the definition of working time/on call and compensatory rest fully implemented across member states in order to better protect the health of workers and third parties such as patients.

Please motivate your answer:

500 character(s) maximum[optional]

We would like to see the ongoing debate resolved and a big push by the commission and social partners to ensure that the existing protections are fully enforced and the relevant EU judgments effectively implemented.

4. Other comments or suggestions
The RCN welcomes the opportunity to further comment on the Working Time Directive. The RCN would like to reiterate our belief that the underlying principle of the Working Time Directive, namely the need to address the health and safety affects of long working hours and shift work, must remain central to any review. What’s more, in the health sector, there is a growing body of evidence linking the health and wellbeing of health care staff with the quality and safety of patient care.

Long working hours with a lack of restorative breaks are not uncommon in the sectors where our members work including health care and prisons. Long and uncontrolled working hours, including night shift work and lack of sleep continue to be implicated in a whole range of health problems from increased risk of type 2 diabetes, breast cancer and increased dependence on alcohol.

With an ageing European workforce, it is essential that we have good controls in place to prevent people being made ill by work and to support continued employment. The Working Time Directive provides the safeguards that are needed to protect workers across Europe.

The key issue for the RCN is effective implementation and enforcement and rather than re-write the directive we would like to see this as the new focus of the work of the EU and member states.
